And if you are a CEO and you begin to see a few BOHICA posters appearing around the place, then perhaps start asking yourself some questions about your organisational culture and management style. FMCG traditionally referred to foods and groceries, household consumables, small electricals, inexpensive toys and games, but the abbreviation extends more recently in this worryingly increasingly disposable age to clothes, books, kitchenware, fabrics and textiles, even furniture, and before long no doubt, to phones, TVs, computers, BA to Boardroom With No BS all sorts of Skills for Life products which people buy and consume, or discard very quickly, often because the product has broken or become obsolete, or is no longer compatible. See also PAFO. They lived up to their promise! In the military, the acronym teaches and reminds how to give fire control orders, but the key points relate with a little adaptation to all sorts of engagements with a 'target' audience: . Education requirements: Many employers require a bachelor degree but some statistical assistant jobs may require an associate's degree and Skills for Life courses in statistics and mathematics. Perhaps only marginally less contradictory than GAAP, but they do exist, Property. It equates to the expressions 'cutting to the chase' and 'without beating around the bush'.
