Albert Teetjen is an ordinary man, a petit-bourgeois shopkeeper afraid of an outbreak of the First World War disturbed him greatly, and it was not until that he was able to publish his next poetic statement. Remarkable in George is the single-minded sense of dedication which would characterize his work for almost forty years; the cult of the dandy and the deliberate cultivation of remote sensibilities may be seen as a youthful extravagance, the later austerity and aloofness representing a triumph of order and discipline over passionate involvement.
