Ultimately, the fields should merge together, be considered on an equal footing, and published in truly cross-cultural collected volumes. The Arabs cultivated grapes and introduced rice, sugarcane, and saffron as well as apricots, peaches, pomegranates, and oranges. Casteneda,ed. In the south side, at a lower level, there are the remains of a staircase that could connect this courtyard with that situated at its foot. On every side beneath the trees may be seen a magic land of myriad San Josemaría (Arcaduz) (Spanish Edition) lamps; single or in trefoils and clusters of seven and ten and twenty, the oranges hang within a few inches of the ground. Advances in mathematics and the use of numerals were among the most dramatic accomplishments of Arab savants, many of whom were in Spain.

Access to the courtyard was from the east side, via a ramp which connected the
