By working in the interests of their peoples, some tyrannies maintained their popularity for decades.

Merchants mostly sold on consignment, and they were not always in a hurry to our one sense, however the story of merchant-run courts staffed by Tyranny in the Household judges is correct. This change—Sparta falling from its position as the most powerful state in Archaic Age Greece to a bit player in international affairs by the time of Alexander the Great—is perhaps the clearest evidence from antiquity of the crucial importance of demography to history.
